THE LOCAL STAGE.

nrance of Walter E. Perkins in "Hy Friend from India." od morning," says Jennings, a ser-"Is it?" replies Charles Underolt, a young man who is just beginning to recover from the effects of a night

From that moment on there is not a duli line or an uninteresting situation in "My Friend From India," H. A. Du Souchet's clever farce, which was presented at Sweeney & Coombs' opera house yesterday afternoon and again last night. The plece has been seen here before and the story it tells is well known, but its presentation was especially interesting on this occasion from the fact that the capable company which appeared in it was headed by Mr. Walter E. Perkins, the fareeur who originated the part of A. Keene Shaver and made such a distinct sud deserved hit in it during the early days of the production. Mr. Perkins is thoroughly original and his portrayal of the role of the barber who has leanings toward theosophy is a more than pleasing one. His absolute lack of affectation is refreshingly noticeable and his ability to make known by his facial expression things some actors would use a great many words in telling, is not the least enjoyable of his many pleasing characteristics. His rendition of the part leaves fittle to be desired.

The playars with whom Mr. Perkins has surrounded himself are all capable. Among the laddes Miss Lillian Brainerd, who appears as Mrs. Beekman-Streete, is unusually effective. Her work is thoroughly good throughout and, with Mit. Perkins, she appears to especially good advantage in the mirror scene. Miss Lillian Harris makes a very pleasing Marion Hayste and Miss Grace E. Clarks and Miss Lottle Briscoe are clever in the respective parts of Bernice and Gertrude Underholt. All of the ladies are personally attractive and some very handsome gowns are worn by them during the play.

Miss Mower as Tilly, the German maid, as whole show by herself, although at Sweeney & Coombs' opera house yesterday afternoon and again last night.

Miss Mower as Tilly, the German maid, is a whole show by herself, although her personal appearance and her manners of interpreting the part differ considerably from those of others who have appeared in the role. Miss Mower is nearly if not quite, as broad as she is long and her clever work is made all the more enterprising by her make up.

her clever work is made all the more entertaining by her make up.

Mr. Fred Mower is very good as Erastus Underholt and the part of Charles Underholt and the part of Charles Underholt is capably played by Mr. Charles and succeed in business?" All mea involved to cast, Mr. Frank H. Crane as Tom Valentine, Mr. Millard Simpson as the African missionary and the policeman, and Mr. Theodore Johnson as Jonaings are all capable and all do good work in their respective parts. The audiences present at each of the two performances were fairly large and on both occalans the play gave complete satisfaction if one is to judge by the amount of applicase which it elicited.
